

Reven's Random Character Generator Table Compilation

THE WALL OF INTRO TEXT AND WTF IS THIS EVEN

This compilation, was made from a combination of tables from Maid RPG (you will find a small amount of anime references), Pathfinder and some of my efforts to make random D&D character (note: not "stat sheets", but "characters"). The main point behind them is to help people that are less fortunate in creativity department, new players or just people who don't have time running between 50 different sites and manuals gathering needed tables. This is meant to be useful, fun, fast and maybe just a little bit cool.

It was also made with the intent to "ease" players into making their own creations, that's why some of the options are pretty vague - it makes you create something with a set condition, but that also feels better specifically for you. For example, none of the tables that relate to the other players' characters specify which character(s) they are directed or applied to - you can decide for yourself or roll. Other tables, like "Symbol" have vague options like "Animal" - What animal? Where does it go? How does it relate to your character? All of that is for you to choose, ask the DM or roll.

I would also say that it's aimed more toward "epic fantasy" settings, rather than realistic ones, but it could work for either, try it out and see how it is.

Remember, the most important thing about role playing is to have fun and let other have fun with you! Good luck with your random characters!

Dice Needed: d4 (once), d10 (once), 2d6, d8, d20, d100 (for linked Pathfinder tables).
